Peter Brackenridge brings to the table the insight of a career as a senior executive in the public service. With a detailed understanding of how the systems work on the inside, Peter guides clients to successful outcomes.

Public Service Expertise

During his 33+ years in the federal Public Service, Peter occupied a variety of Senior Executive positions, with a wide range of leadership responsibilities related to: policy, program and regulation/legislation development; operational implementation; emergency planning, preparedness and response; corporate planning and reporting; performance reviews and funding submissions; federal/provincial relations; and international liaison and negotiations. Peter was one of the lead architects involved in the establishment of the Canadian Food Inspection Agency (CFIA) – Canada’s largest science-based regulatory organization, and has extensive experience in the development and implementation of standards and inspection programs in the areas of food safety and quality, animal health and plant protection. He has managed large decentralized regulatory organizations (3400 employees, budget exceeding $200M) and has a long history of working in partnership with government and industry stakeholders, both nationally and internationally. Since his retirement from the CFIA in 2007, Peter has worked as a private consultant providing advice and support to a wide range of national and international government and industry clients in such areas as: organizational design, capacity assessments, resource reviews, strategic planning, and international benchmarking. He is fluent in both official languages.
